Security and privacy have become the biggest talking points in the IT world as of late. Simply stated, security is all about protecting against threats and keeping information and assets safe. Privacy, on the other hand, is all about dealing with matters of personal safety. If you're having a hard time understanding how these two issues could be related, all you need to do is think about privacy's relation to cybersecurity. After all, who is more at risk to threats than people who don't have all their information and assets secured? Think about it: - The people who use digital wallets for transactions don't think about their data enough and do not feel the need to protect it. - The people who use malware use them as a means to steal data. However, this also means they're using the very tools used to protect themselves. - The people who are using online browsing - such as Facebook - are at a risk of leaking their personal data. - The people who are using e-mail are one more step away from losing everything that's stored in the cloud. With this in mind, how can you enhance your cybersecurity capabilities and protect yourself from threats? The following are some of the ways that you can do so, with the help of strong passwords. 1. Choose a strong password This is by far the most important tip in any cybersecurity context. As the name indicates, strong passwords are strong in terms of strength and also in usability. The number one rule to using strong passwords is to think of your password as something that you can easily remember, but something that is hard for an attacker to guess, especially in a brute force way. If you do not know how to create strong passwords, you're at a big disadvantage. Fortunately, there are a number of tools that can assist you in generating strong passwords. Let's see some of them here: SterJo Strong Password Generator - An incredible password generation tool that, besides giving you random characters, can generate lists of passwords and keys. Strong Password Generator – A reliable password generator that, unlike others, will give you a user-friendly experience. 2. Use a login key (LUK) If you use your own laptop or PC to access the networks you rely on, you’re already using the mechanism to generate different keys for your username. This mechanism, however, could be used by your attacker as well and that is why you should b7e8fdf5c8
